Operational Definition of a Clinical Trial

A clinical trial is a prospective study involving human subjects designed to answer specific questions about the effects or impact of particular biomedical or behavioral interventions; these may include drugs, treatments, devices, or behavioral or nutritional strategies.

Diagnostic Clinical Trials: a clinical trial if it uses the information from the diagnostic test in a manner that affects medical decision-making for the study subject. The information from the diagnostic may have an impact on some aspect of outcome, and assessment of this impact may be a key goal of the trial. Studies whose objective is only the gathering of data on the characteristics of a new diagnostic approach, are not clinical trials.

Behavioral clinical trials: interventions whose goals are to increase behaviors, eliminate or reduce behaviors and/or improve coping and quality of life and reduce the negative sequelae of treatment. Interventions may pertain to cancer prevention, early detection, treatment, and survivorship. Observational studies and those that do not test interventions are not clinical trials.

Recommendations

• It is recommended that a database be developed to collect all clinical trials costs, to differentiate between types of trials, clinical trials phases, major anatomical sites, and to include associated costs.

• NCI CTROC recommends that the RAEB, the official source of science based budget information for NCI supported extramural research, repeat this inventory every five years.
